connectivity” plan which will include looking at future transportation needs, signage and more. A consultant would be hired to put the master plan together, said Williams, at an expected cost of $100,000 which would be split between three cities and the PCID.

With the unanimous vote last week, Dunwoody councilors committed the city to pay $25,000 towards the master plan. Sandy Springs and the PCID had already committed their support. Williams said that Brookhaven would also be asked to support the master plan.

Thompson said that this effort was exactly what the city needed to do in light of expected future traffic issues.

In other Perimeter news, council was asked to consider dedicating city property to the Georgia Department of Transportation for I-285 and Georgia 400 interchange improvements. Portions of two separate land parcels on Perimeter Center Parkway are needed by GDOT for right of way and easement purposes.

Public Works Director Michael Smith told councilors that this land was acquired from DeKalb County when the city incorporated. The city had not made plans for the land, said Smith, other than possibly for green space.

Councilor Lynn Deutsch asked Smith to talk to GDOT about fixing flooding issues on Cotillion Drive in exchange for the donation. Smith said that he had been talking to their district engineers about that issue and would talk to them again about a more formal commitment.

As a first read item on their agenda, councilors did not vote, but are expected to approve the land donation at their next meeting on April 11. After donation, the city would still have over five acres of land in the area.

new sidewalks on the south side of Mount Vernon Road between Dunwoody Village Parkway and Vernon Oaks Drive.

At the same time, infrastructure work is continuing on Chamblee Dunwoody Road south of Mt. Vernon. The section from Cambridge Drive south to Womack Road has no bicycle striping and sidewalks, when available, are only on the west side of Chamblee Dunwoody. The proposed improvements aim to remedy the deficiencies by widening the road to accommodate bicycle lanes in both directions and a sidewalk on the east side of the road. Existing stormwater ditches will be replaced with stormwater pipes, curb, and gutter.

Re-paving will begin when that work is completed.
